NEED OF CARE ON OCEAN RACERS.

There is manifestion to record, brenking cats in these times. . There is glory in accomplishing such feats. There is a aplendid thrill in the breasts of those who witness or take part in such accomulishments. And perhaps in no instances are all these things truer or the thrill stronger than in those of the majes. tie ocean greyhounds who race with time on the voyage across the Atlantic. Even those who do no more than read the tidings of speedier passages made feel something of elation over the successes of the great racers.

of ocean racing which should never be lost sight of. In the intensity of excitement and interest over getting up all possible speed the possibilities of gravest accident may some day be underestimated. This would furnish such cause for vain and awful regret as not a thousand thousands of record breaking could make recompense for. It would place in peril-would, perhaps, take away the lives of hundreds of people. In view of this possibility, proper care-taking by those in charge of the racing vessels must be the first, foremost and constant thought, let moments press as they may. Minutes are not of value to be counted against lives.

A good way to clean the teeth is to dip th brush in water, rub it over genuine cactil soap, then dip it in prepared chaik. A lad says: "I have been complimented upon th whiteness of my teeth, which were originally anything but white. I have used the soa constantly for two or three years, and th chalk for the last year. There is no dange of scratching the teeth, as the cialk is prepared, but with a good stiff brush and th

The Cleopatra Girdle. The so-called Cleopatra girdle, which re embles the fillet of the Egyptian Queen, ont that it is a band around the head, seems t seen at all tashionable London social event out the roll of ribbon or velvet about he mer resorts and suburban lotterers. The modern belie has turned the bandeau around since Cleopatra's time. That dark-eyed beaut wore it about her classic head, with the still points above the nape of her neck, and the pointed across rather than up and down, I
